Artist's Commentary

"The animal agriculture industry is full of deception and deceit. This film captures the final moments of pigs, roughly around 6 months old before they enter the slaughterhouse and are killed for 'pork'. A rare moment many, who consume meat will never see nor think about. Accompanied by a simple buddhist mantra prayer, Om Ah Hung Benza Guru Pema Siddhi Hung, this film explores the connection between the life and death pigs from the slaughterhouse to dinner table plates. How can we, human beings, morally justify killing sentient beings for greed? The footage captured is at Essex Pig Save, apart of the The Save Movement in which activists come together to offer a single moment of comfort and love to these animals and document the barbarism that is the animal agriculture industry. Evil thrives from plate to plate, our own bodies carry their plight."

We would like to honor the achievements of Emma Sproat during the participation of the Banality of Evil in our Daily Lives Art Prize. Their outstanding artwork and interpretation of the theme awarded them a place as a finalist amongst 575 qualifying entries from 89 countries across 4 different artistic disciplines.

The artists' work was featured in the exhibition at Alte Münze, Berlin Germany from 12 September to 17 September 2020 along with the other 39 Finalists and Winners.

The Banality of Evil in our Daily Lives Art Prize, initiated and sponsored by artist and social activist @SaySay.love, who was inspired by Hannah Arendt, wanted to encourage artists to interpret the theme and relate what they perceive the banality of evil in "their" daily lives and the thoughtlessness of our society. The awarding of winners was curated by an esteemed panel of international judges like Andrey Bartenov and Aram Haus, to name but a few 575 qualified entries from 89 countries that met the submission requirements were posted on BOE social media channels for public voting between November 2019 and March 2020.

One winner in each artistic category received prize money of US$2000 for their artwork which made an impression on the judges and the public.

HISTORY AND IDEA BEHIND THE COMPETITION

How can we harness thought to eradicate evil in the world? How can art help us to evolve social consciousness? Can creativity change the future?

An initiative using art as a mechanism for social change, is stimulating discussion and creative representation of a topic that affects us all.

The theme of this exhibition is inspired by the work of philosopher Hannah Arendt, who reported on the Nazi trials for the New York Times in a famous book called Eichmann in Jerusalem: A Report on the Banality of Evil.

In a time where we are at a global tipping point on so many critical matters, from climate change to gender violence to refugee crisis, we encouraged artists to play a role in vocalising the importance of all individuals to take a stand and make a difference.

Hannah was famous for her analysis of Nazi Germany, discovering with surprise that many of the worst perpetrators had not committed atrocities with the intention of doing evil. In fact, the opposite was true. It seems that the worst evil was committed by people who had not given their actions moral thought. They were not acting with intention but simply following instructions – and in fact obeying the law.

This highlights for us the danger of complacency, of acting without independent thought. The sad truth of the matter is that most evil is done by people who never made up their minds to be or do either evil or good.
